

Warrior Gateway

From finding a job and paying the bills to coping with life-changing injuries, a new set of challenges confronts those who have served our country in uniform when they return home. Some struggle to find work; others end up homeless. Their families often must rely on welfare. The wounded have unique, lifelong needs.

Over the past decade, thousands of private and non-profit organizations have stepped forward to help veterans meet these challenges. While well-intentioned, most of these groups are disconnected, unknown or overwhelming in number to veterans, and undergo no independent evaluation.

At the request of the Chairman of the Joint Chiefs of Staff Adm. Mike Mullen and the Department of Veterans Affairs, Business Executives for National Security (BENS) and the Veterans Coalition are leading a solution to help veterans navigate the maze of private organizations serving veterans and successfully reenter civilian life: Warrior Gateway.

Warrior Gateway Will:

- Give veterans and their families easy access to a user-friendly, central repository of information about military community service providers
- Provide virtual communities where veterans and their families can connect with each other for support
- Offer career exploration and employment resources to help veterans understand how their skills and interests transfer to private-sector jobs
- Enable donors to make informed decisions with metrics-based evaluations of service providers
- Help non-profit and government service organizations keep in touch with the veterans community

To build a user-friendly, web-based Warrior Gateway platform, BENS brought together a coalition of business and military leaders who are working with best-in-class technology companies and other experts to support all transitioning service members, veterans and their families.

Warrior Gateway Core Benefits

- Better access to information and services rated by the military community
- Help wounded warriors, vets and spouses explore career opportunities and connect with regional training and education programs
- Drive improvement in the service provider community through evaluation and collaboration
- A national platform that will support the military community through the latest social networking technology, outreach, career support and the largest user-friendly database of military related resources in America
